Journal Article

Treadwell, A. M. (2021). Tongues Of Fire: AME Theological Protection In The Face Of Lynching. The Griot: Journal Of African American Studies, Volume 39(Number 01), 28-47.

https://issuu.com/thescaasigriot/docs/screen_shot_2021-08-19_at_12.59.01_pm-merged-compr

This study has examined the last 50 years of lynching scholarship in order to highlight a major void – black spirituality as a method of self-defense. Research documents used, include: sermons; diaries; conference minutes; auto-biographies; and Church periodicals. Stewart Tolnay and E. Beck's statistical lynching database has also aided this project's attempt to find a correlation between lynchings and precautionary and reactionary sermons delivered to black congregations. Finally, this study uses the theological self-defense theory to support Wilmore's thesis that the black church of the Reconstruction Era was the most radical institution within the Southern Negro's community.

Book Chapter

Treadwell, A. M. (2023). Total War: The Justification of Lynching Black Women. Chapter in a Book. Peter Lang Publishing.

This chapter will analyze the attributes of black female lynchings in the nadir era in order to exemplify the history of violence against the black family. By so doing, the history of racial violence in the United States will be exposed as an inclusive act that has physically impacted black women alongside black men.

Treadwell, A. M. (2023). Black Fires: Analyzing the Relationship Between Radical Theology and Arson in South Georgia. Discourses of Crisis and the Study of Religion. Sheffield, South Yorkshire: Equinox Publishing Ltd..

<https://journals.equinoxpub.com/index.php/books/rt/metadata/43937>

In the summer of 1962, there were six major arson cases in Southern Georgia. These acts of terrorism became national news and would receive a response from J. Edgar Hoover, John F. Kennedy, Martin Luther King Jr., and Jackie Robinson. This paper will examine the cause and effect of these acts of terrorism, with the intention to express the theological reverberations of black church fires. The arsons of 1962 forced six Georgia churches to exercise black resistance theology, and the diverse application of each congregation exposes the multifaceted face of black resistance.

Treadwell, A. M. (2023). Understanding and Teaching Contemporary U.S. History since Reagan. Examining African-American Voter Suppression, Reagan to Trump. Madison, Wisconsin: University of Wisconsin Press.

The Civil Rights Movement is widely recognized in American History as a successful reformation that introduced black constitutionalism to many. This movement also has been described as a spark that ignited a socio-political enlightenment within U.S. culture and political identity. However, hindsight is exposing a problematic nuance within America's racial constitutional reform. The Civil Rights Act of 1964 is now fifty-five years old, and African-American political reformers are still fighting political-sociological inequality in grassroots and judicial arenas. The historiography on civil rights has encapsulated the movement as beginning in the 1940s and ending in the 1970s, whereas revisionist historians are now highlighting a new wave of black social reform—formally known as the Civil Rights Movement 2.0. This chapter will define the socio-political concerns within the second wave of civil rights reformation and will provide students with an enhanced interpretation of modern black constitutionalism.

Book Review

Treadwell, A. M. A Long Reconstruction: Racial Caste and Reconciliation in the Methodist Church. Houston, TX: Rice University.

Sean Copeland, a theological anthropologist, once described the ambiguity of black Catholic praxis as 'uncommon faithfulness.' Her book Uncommon Faithfulness, which focuses on black Catholic experiences, exposed a social complexity concerning people of African descent and their dedication to a religion in which they serve as oppressed minorities. In Copeland's research, the Catholic Church underserved the Negro community, whereas the allure for eventual interracial cooperation convinced black membership to remain in the fold. What this work did for black Catholic relations in the historiography of North American religious history is what Paul William Harris attempted to replicate in A Long Reconstruction. Harris' work provides an analysis on the racial caste dynamics of the Methodist Episcopal Church in America between 1777 to 1914.
